Why I am running for president of the CSN

Brothers and sisters,

Since 2021, I have had the honour of representing you as President of the CSN. It is an immense privilege—and responsibility—to which I have been fully committed. Every struggle, every victory and every mobilization strengthens my resolve.

Over the past few years, we have fought hard. And we have won.

Our victories have ruffled some feathers. The powerful have fought back, but we have stood our ground. And we will continue to do so, because we know no other way.

Headwinds and challenges ahead

We have faced headwinds of rare intensity in recent years: attacks on our fundamental rights, including the right to strike, and constant pressure to weaken the checks and balances in our society. We see attempts to delegitimize union action on all sides.

While inequalities are growing and the richest get tax breaks, governments are depriving themselves of revenue, allowing public services to deteriorate and showing no respect for the workers who provide them. Rising living costs and trade disputes threaten jobs and weaken regional economies. This pressure reminds us of an obvious fact: decent working conditions and public services of good quality are essential for people to be able to live with dignity.

In this environment, it is clear that we can take nothing for granted; our struggles require vigilance, unity and perseverance. More than ever, we must be the strongest link. Together.

Together, we are the strongest link

The CSN is the strong link in the Québec labour movement. This isn't just a slogan. We are a real force, forged by our ability to unite, fight and win.

My vision for the 2026–2029 term

For the next term, I propose a CSN that is:

- Determined and organized—to defend workers and the most vulnerable;
- Combative—to repel attacks on our rights and our social fabric;
- Responsive—rooted in your struggles and realities, on the ground, in your sectors and your regions;
- United and present—in the public arena, the media and the political sphere, to make your voice heard.

United, we win!

Every day, I see the power of our solidarity. The challenges are immense, but our commitment is even greater. Only unity, courage and collective action can turn struggles into victories. My commitment is fuelled on the ground, at your side, in our debates and our mobilizations. It is this collective strength that drives me to continue this fight, with you.
